

Maryland Day Launches Festivities

by Claranne Albus
News Staff Reporter

Since 1961, Loyola College has commemorated Maryland's founding with an annual Maryland Day celebration. On this occasion, Loyola recalls the merits of Father Andrew White, who celebrated the first Mass on Maryland soil.

Lynn McKain, Assistant Director of Loyola Public Relations, said, "Loyola's focus on Maryland Day is to pay tribute to Father Andrew White, and to recognize the Jesuit connection in the founding of the state of Maryland."

The 28th annual celebration takes place between March 18 and March 25. The Public Relations Department, the Development Office, representatives from Student Activities, and Student Government officers have planned many activities for the Loyola community.

According to McKain, one of the most exciting projects will be "Loyola Night at the Aquarium," planned for Wednesday, March 23, from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. at the National Aquarium at Baltimore's Inner Harbor. Tickets are available at the information booth in the DeChairo College Center at $3 for College personnel and $2 for students and children. Two hundred tickets are available.

On Thursday, March 24, students will be entertained by a balloon launch on Curley Field from noon until 1:30 p.m. McKain said, "A hot air balloon in the shape of the Maryland State flag will be available for students to take free on weather permitting." She added, "Also on Thursday, Maryland Day helium balloons will be distributed throughout campus." Two-hundred "Celebrate Maryland" balloons will be set free on Curley Field at 12:15 p.m., according to McKain.

The activities will continue on the 24th, at 8 p.m., when George McGovern and William F. Buckley will square off in a debate titled, "Resolved: Reagan's Domestic Policies Have Benefitted The Republic." Tickets are available at the Student Activities Office between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. Each student and college employee is entitled to one free debate ticket, and additional tickets are $5 each.

The first mass on Maryland soil, which was celebrated by Fr. White, will be commemorated on Friday, March 25. This day will end the week of Maryland Day festivities. On Friday, Loyola will recognize people who have made great contributions to their profession, community, the state of Maryland, and Loyola.

At 9 a.m. on Friday, a special president's breakfast will be held for the service award recipients. Staff and administrators who have been at Loyola College for 5, 10, 15, 20, and 25 years respectively will receive an award and certificate from Father Sellinger.

At 11:10 a.m., a special liturgy commemorating the day will be celebrated in the Alumni Memorial Chapel.

According to McKain, the climax of the Maryland Day observance will be the ceremony at 4 p.m. in the Chapel. Of the many awards presented during this ritual, the Andrew White Medal, founded in 1961, is the most prestigious. The medal is awarded to Maryland men and women who have dedicated their time and energy to public service.

According to McKain, a number of distinguished people will be in the audience to hear keynote speaker and award recipient Frank Deford speak, including his close friend Pam Shriver.

As part of this Maryland Day celebration, the college will also honor faculty for accomplishments at Loyola.

Maryland Day commemorations have always been something special at Loyola. Sophomore Anne Calloway said she likes the active part Loyola takes in the festivities. Buffalo resident Margaret DiCarlo added, "I'm glad that Loyola celebrates Maryland Day because it helps out-of-towners understand certain Maryland customs."

"Loyola's tuition is not the lowest in the state, but I hope students feel they are getting value for their money. We are not trying to provide the cheapest education in town, rather the best education we can offer at a price students can afford."

Tuition Increases Ten Percent for '88

by Karen Paterakis
News Staff Reporter

Loyola's Board of Trustees has raised the tuition for the coming year to $7,975, a $775 increase from this year. The money from the 10.76 percent tuition increase will be spent primarily on faculty compensation, upgrading computer equipment, and providing the most efficient, effective campus security available, according to Tom Scheye, Academic Vice President.

"Loyola is already a strong college, and our objective is to become even stronger," said College President Father Joseph Sellinger. Sellinger said indications of Loyola's excellence is apparent in the doubling of applications in the last five years, and in alumni that continue to distinguish themselves.

Loyola is listed as a college "best buy," in a book recognizing schools for balancing price against value. "Loyola is proud of the fact that it is the only college in the metropolitan area to be listed in the book," said Scheye.

"Loyola's tuition is not the lowest in the state, but I hope students feel they are getting value for their money. We are not trying to provide the cheapest education in town, rather the best education we can offer at a price students can afford," said Scheye.

In order for Loyola to continue giving its students a challenging and rewarding education, it "must rely on an outstanding faculty, yet faculty compensation has been well below that at other leading colleges," said Father Sellinger.

To further Loyola's goal of academic improvement, steps are being taken to upgrade and replace the present computer system with state-of-the-art computers and computer programs. "I am glad to see money going towards computers," said Cina Sappan, sophomore, M.I.S. major. Scheye said that "money is going back into education, and students sense that. It is not very often that a response to a tuition increase is so positive."

"I agree with raising faculty compensation and keeping pace with computer equipment, but not with paying money for security because we don't get very much for what we put into it now," said John Morris, sophomore.

In the area of security, students can count on additional security for next September, said Scheye. "It is critical to guarantee safety and security," he added.

Scheye said that largely because of the "cap" on the number of freshmen accepted for next year, the college will have to rely on tuition costs and fund raising to achieve these goals.

Financial aid keeps pace with the tuition increase and other expenses, said Mark Lindenmeyer, Director of Financial Aid. Loyola must "meet the needs" of the increase, he said.

Generally, family salaries do not increase by 10.76 percent annually, so there must be compensation for the additional costs. That is why the "increased need of students are addressed year to year," said Lindenmeyer.

Tuition alone does not account for the rising cost of education, according to Sellinger. "Fund raising programs generate well over $1 million in donations annually to offset expenses," he said.

Annual giving to the Evergreen Fund climbed nearly 20 percent last year, according to Sellinger. He added that with the trend toward increased voluntary support and the additional tuition costs for next year, Loyola will be able to "give its students a distinctive Jesuit education as well as a degree that will only grow in value."

Conference Debates Restructuring Higher Ed.

by Nancy Canedo
News Staff Reporter

Fr. Frank Haig, S.J., professor of Physics, represented Loyola at the annual legislative dinner of the Maryland Conference of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP), on February 24.

Haig called the AAUP "the one professional organization that concerns itself with the ethics of the teaching profession."

The session, held in Annapolis, Maryland, focused mainly on Governor William Schaefer's proposals for higher education reconstruction.

Every college and university in Maryland was represented at the dinner.

Senator Arthur Dorman, chairman of the legislative committee to handle Governor Schaefer's program, spoke at the dinner. Dorman addressed the main issue of the faculty's role in the shared governance of colleges, and in education reconstruction.

"In any higher education reconstruction, faculty members want input on governance of the college," Fr. Haig said.

According to Haig, Dorman is against allowing faculty members to be on the Board of Trustees of the college in which they teach. Dorman said he considers this harmful and asked how issues such as tenure and faculty salaries can be handled when faculty members are present.

According to the newsletter, the principles the AAUP follows are: quality education should be for the good of all universities and colleges, a reasonable balance of authority should be maintained between a central board and each academic institution, faculty should have a role in governance of the college, use of professional talents should be improved, and a new system should be provided for more generous financial support for faculty research and participation in professional meetings.

Haig said it is unlikely that Loyola will reconstruct because "we're not sure what will happen to the governor's proposals."

Jean Wilhelm, President of the Maryland Conference of the AAUP and faculty member at Goucher College, said that unless the AAUP receives a great rush of funds, she doubts that reconstruction of higher education will soon occur.

"The issue regarding reconstruction seems to be bureaucratic rather than educational," Wilhelm said.

Wilhelm added that "the main thrust of the AAUP is to centralize power in the state for all educational institutions" but it is difficult to satisfy all the interests of Maryland colleges and universities.

"Maryland has everything from small private colleges to huge state universities, and their individual interests are very different," Wilhelm said.

Wilhelm stressed that the stronger the AAUP becomes, the greater its influence will be on the state legislature. She said this goes far beyond fiscal support for higher education and faculty participation in governance of the institution.

Another major issue that was discussed at the dinner was the proposal to open a special high school for students talented in math and science. It was turned down by a vote of 10 to 1.

Fr. Haig described the February 24th AAUP session as "very intense." He said he found Dorman's speech to be "more probing and open than expected."

Fr. Haig voiced concern about faculty maintaining influence in the restructuring of higher education.

Central Duplicating And Post Office Move To Wynnewood

by Maria Trintis
Assistant Features Editor

The presses in Maryland Hall will shut down, and the Central Duplicating office and the Post Office will move to West Wynnewood Towers on Wednesday, March 30. "With the increase in workload, it is only natural," said James Holy, Manager of Office Services.

"It will be business as usual," Holy said. The production area of Central Duplicating and the bulk of the sorting of Loyola's branch of the United States Post Office is what is being moved, according to Holy. The Audio Visual Department, though, will remain in the basement of Maryland Hall and the present location will primarily be a service area.

According to Holy, the present location will be renovated into one large room to include all the video and visual equipment and operations, an area where the services of Central Duplicating will be secured, and a copy machine for emergency copies and smaller runs will be available. Also, the services of the Post Office will remain the same with a window for mail and mail orders.

"Why are we moving? Because we care," said Holy. "What we want to do is to provide the most effective and efficient service that we possibly can."

The faculty concern regarding the transfer of Central Duplicating and the Post Office Operations from Maryland Hall to Wynnewood Towers was expressed briefly at the March 15th meeting of the Faculty Senate. The general concern is that there will be a longer turnaround time on tests. Central Duplicating will no longer guarantee a one-day turnaround time. Although they will work for returning copies in one day, they can only guarantee a two-day turnaround. As with any change, "it will take the cooperation of everybody," said Holy.

Faculty may also be concerned with the delivery system of tests back and forth from Wynnewood. Yet, Holy has assured that the security of exams will be safeguarded in locked containers. "It is change, and at first most everyone is resistant. But I am a firm believer of change as long as it is for the betterment of the Loyola community," said Holy. "How do we know if it is going to work out unless we try it?"

Gary Watkins, manager of the Post Office, said, "It's still too early to tell. I don't know if it's going to help us or hinder us. We do need a bigger office, though."

Mike Beltran, senior Management major, said, "I think it will be an inconvenience for Central Duplicating to be located in Wynnewood because that's an office that is utilized by every other office on campus. Therefore, it won't be centrally located anymore. Yet, it will be more convenient for me to have the office downstairs whenever I want to make flyers for my job as a R.A. (Residents Assistant)."

Loyola Links Up with Brazil in Exchange

by Katie O'Donnell
News Staff Reporter

Loyola will soon participate in a university linkage program with the Catholic University of Petropolis, in Brazil, according to Daniel McGuire, Dean of Development. In this program, one faculty member from Loyola will be sent to Brazil to explore educational opportunities. This "educational link" will be sponsored by "Partners of the Americas," an international program between Latin American countries and each of the 50 states.

"Partners of the Americas" is the largest private voluntary organization promoting economic and social development in the Western Hemisphere. The organization's purpose is to provide a better understanding of each country's culture and teaching techniques through professional and university exchanges.

Dean McGuire is coordinating the cooperative educational venture with the Catholic University of Petropolis.

opportunities and establishing solid working relationships with a "partner" institution in Latin America.

Loyola's goal is to act as a link between the people of Maryland and the people in Rio de Janeiro.

"Partners of the Americas" will provide funds for the Loyola faculty member's transportation to the Catholic University in Petropolis. The Loyola faculty member will reside in the home of a faculty member from the Catholic University and will remain there for no less than two weeks. During that period, the faculty member will teach at the university and research the educational facility.

The program is designed to provide for faculty exchange while building personal and institutional contacts. John Cray, Loyola Professor of Management and Law, said, "It will open the door and establish an initial contact." Interaction between each institution will occur through Loyola faculty working with Catholic University faculty, he said.

The Catholic University of Petropolis offers many fields of study. The departments include a Faculty of Law, a Faculty of Economics, Accounting, and Administration, and a Faculty of Education.

The University's academic year begins in February and ends in June, or begins in August and ends in December. There are 261 faculty members and 3000 students enrolled at the University.

"Partners of the Americas" and the linkage program enable universities to expand and enrich programs by exchanging and training faculty and students, expanding graduate programs, conducting joint research, developing and updating curricula, and promoting library and data base exchange.

Andrew White Medals to be Awarded

by Patrick Clancy
News Staff Reporter

Loyola College will award five Andrew White Medals to distinguished Marylanders and will honor two alumni with the Alumni Laureate Award at its annual Maryland Day celebration, on Friday, March 25.

Since 1961, Loyola has honored the founding of Maryland with this day of celebration. The occasion gives Marylanders a chance to remember the 1634 arrival of ships "The Ark" and "The Dove," which brought settlers to Clement's Island. Among the early Maryland settlers was Father Andrew White, the Jesuit priest who said the first mass in the new colony on March 25, the feast day of the Annunciation.

The presentation of the Andrew White Medal is the highlight of the annual Maryland Day ceremony. This year, the distinguished Marylanders who will be awarded include Frank DeFord, Sister Marie Cecilia Irwin, OSF, and Wesley Unseld.

Lynn R. McKain, Acting Director of Public Relations at Loyola, said that these Marylanders are being awarded for "contributions to their professions as well as their civic contributions."

Sister Marie Cecilia Irwin, OSF, is president of Saint Joseph Hospital in Towson.

Wesley Unseld is head coach of the Washington Bullets and recently elected to the Basketball Hall of Fame. Unseld also gives much of his time to the Kerman Hospital in Baltimore.

The College will also present Alumni Laureate awards to William J. Baird, Jr., a local insurance executive, and John J. Neubauer, Jr., a Baltimore lawyer and businessman.

The awards will be presented during the Maryland Day ceremony in Loyola's Alumni Memorial Chapel of Friday at 4 p.m.

Loyola Hails Spring With Concert Series

by Siobhan O'Brien
News Staff Reporter

Loyola will welcome the coming of spring at the end of March with a spring concert series starting on Saturday, March 26 and ending Monday, March 28, according to Loyola Music Director, Anthony Villa.

Three concerts will be performed in McManus Theater, one concert each day. Renown pianist David Buechner will start off the series with his performance on Saturday night. The following concerts will include a faculty recital on Sunday, and a student recital on Monday. Admission to the concerts is free, but will be on a first come first serve basis.

The Peggy and Yale Gordon Trust Fund will sponsor Buechner's Loyola concert. Buechner, a Baltimore native, will play on a New Yamaha 3.F.III Concert Grand piano. Buechner's performance at Loyola will end a series of piano recitals he has performed throughout Baltimore this month. The recital starts at 8 p.m. and the theater is expected to fill quickly, according to Villa.

On Sunday, March 27, a recital will be performed by music department faculty at 3 p.m. in McManus Theater. The faculty will sing and play instruments from the Marimba to the violin. The concert will consist of both solo and ensemble performances by several Loyola teachers. Agi Rado will play the piano and Lynne Steele will play the guitar for Loyola audiences for the second time this year. Pamela Jordan, soprano, will also perform.

A student recital will take place in McManus Theater on Monday, March 28, at 7:30 p.m. This will include a wide variety of performances by Loyola students, many of whom study with instructors at Loyola. Students were required to audition for the recital. Student performances will include a mens' vocal quartet, several instrumentalists, and solo singers.

Charles Street Gains New Home Sites

by Jim Choplick
Senior Staff Writer

Residents of the 5700 block of N. Charles Street will get six new sets of neighbors when the Charlestowne Garth development reaches completion.

The development, north of E. Northern Parkway on the east side of Charles Street, will feature six homes on the three and a half acre parcel with each homesite occupying a half acre a piece.

Goldcrest Homes, Inc., recently acquired the land from Church of the Redeemer for $310,000 when the church put it on the market in the latter part of 1987.

Goldcrest, the developer and designer of the two-story, traditional homes, is currently waiting for the houses and development to go through zoning, which should come in mid-April. According to James Franzoni, president of two-car garages, large country kitchens, three or four bedrooms, large master suites with whirlpools, and hardwood floors on the first story.

The house lots will contain patios, and, says Franzoni, the lots are spacious enough for children.

To create access for the Charlestowne Garth development, an entrance road will be created at Charles Street to service four of the homes, while Charlestowne Drive, just east of Charles Street, will service the other two homes.

Initial interest in the development, says Franzoni, "has been phenomenal," and reservations are currently being taken through Meredith Realty, who will sell the homes when they are put on the market.

Charlestowne Garth will feature 2-story traditional homes.

Goldcrest, land development should start sometime in June.

The cost of a house in Charlestowne Garth will average $350,000, and buyers will have their choice of either brick construction or wood siding.

According to Franzoni, the houses will feature, among other amenities, attached

Franzoni believes that the people buying into the development, "will be professional people who work in the Baltimore City area" and who are interested in traditional communities.

Passport Provides Experience en France

The Eiffel Tower, the Roman Coliseum, the Parthenon—sound exciting? All of these can be seen by studying abroad. Studying abroad has long been a way of touring Europe with the pretext of studying or learning a foreign language, but it can also be a means of learning about and better understanding another culture and the people in it.

Americans tend to have stereotypical images of other nations and it usually takes living in the foreign country to break them. During the fall semester of this year, I studied in Grenoble, France—the sight of the 1968 Winter Olympics. It is situated in between 4 mountain ranges which help comprise the French Alps. Before going, I had a preconceived notion of how the French were. The stereotype of a French person is that of a cold, aloof, rude person waiting to ridicule your attempts at the French language. My preconceived notion was not based just on unknown stereotypes, however. I had previously been to France and both times met many people who fit this bill. This time I was determined to go with an open mind. Being a resident as opposed to a visiting tourist made all the difference. Now I could actually meet people, see them in their everyday routine and try to erase their stereotypes of Americans. I could assimilate myself into their way of life to try and understand why they are the way they are.

After five months abroad my view of French people has changed drastically.

They tend to be reserved at first, and sometimes hard to get to know, but far from rude. Once acquainted with them they will generally go out of their way to be of service.

Now that I'm back, I can't advise people enough to study abroad if they have the chance. There are lots of advantages of going away. First, it gets you away from the Loyola bubble we all live under and gives you a view of the world. When you come home you'll appreciate all you have that much more. Second, it's a fun way to study because much of what you learn is outside the classroom—in museums, gothic churches, on the streets, etc.

Convincing Mom and Dad may be the hardest part of it all. Money is always a problem. If you are careful, however, you can get away with not spending much more than at Loyola. Tuition where I studied was about $550 a semester, which is practically negligible. Housing, food, airfare, other travel expenses and spending money must be taken into account, but even with the plunging dollar last semester, my stay in France was affordable. There are also scholarships available for overseas studies if you look hard enough.

Once your decision is made to go, you should prepare yourself for your trip. Invest in a "Let's Go Europe Guide". It will be the best $20.00 you ever spent. Eurorail passes are not always necessary because with a student card you can buy train tickets just as cheap on an as needed basis. Get ready for some culture shock, though. French customs are very different and you must be ready to adapt.

The Chateau de Chambord.

Large, sitdown lunches and 8 o'clock dinners are the norm as is not bathing on a daily basis. But with an open mind, though not always open nostrils, you can learn to deal with anything. You should also be flexible to change and be very patient—the French wait in line for everything.

When you get to France, avoid other English speaking people, in particular other Americans. French people are much more likely to accept you if you are making the effort to learn their language than if you search out other Americans to hang with. If you can, live with a family as opposed to a residence hall or apartment. French students living on campus go home nearly every weekend, so you would be stuck alone. With a family you at least always have company and also have a base to meet others. There is no easier way to learn a language than to sit at the dinner table and listen to two teenage kids mock each other. If you stay with a family, you will also experience the best part of France: the delights of French cuisine. Pastries, bread, chocolate fondue, cheese, wine—the list goes on and on. These alone make the trip worthwhile.

Imagine the snow-covered Alps, the Roman ruins which are abundant in the south of France, the castles in the Loire River valley, or even the view of Paris from atop the Eiffel Tower. Can't you hear them beckoning?

and the like: Maryland Fried chicken and Maryland Fried Tomatoes. For the Batter:

- 1 1/3 cups flour
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon pepper
- 1 tablespoon melted butter
- 2 beaten eggs
- 3 tablespoons Old Bay

Mix these together in a bowl and gradually add 3/4 cup of beer (National Bohemian of course!). Let the batter sit in the refrigerator covered for 3 hours. Then take 3 pounds of cut-up fryer chicken, rinse with cold water and pat dry. Dip each piece of chicken in the batter and drip off the excess. Place each piece of chicken on a piece of waxed paper and let dry for 15 minutes. Put about 1 quart of oil in a deep pot (or use a deep fryer if you have one) and heat until a drop of batter placed in the oil begins to bubble. Lower the heat to medium and wait 5 minutes. Place as many pieces of chicken as you can fit into the pot, but don't force too many in. Cook the chicken for 15 minutes, turning the pieces occasionally.

In the meantime, start your Maryland Tomatoes. For this all you need is 3-4 large, ripe tomatoes, and about 1/2 cup of flour mixed with some salt and pepper. Slice the tomatoes into 1/4 inch slices and drench them into the flour mixture. Heat 4-5 tablespoons of butter and 1/4 cup of oil (the oil keeps the butter from burning) and fry the tomato slices in the pan until they are golden brown on both sides.

Maryland Fowl

This week is Maryland Week here at Loyola College, and I promised Lynn McKain that I would write a recipe for a traditional Maryland food. As you all know, I do not have the same passion for the cuisine of "The Free State" as those who reside here. But, there is much to be said of their culinary tastes nonetheless. Dishes like Maryland Crab Soup and Crabcakes are perennial favorites with everybody.

Some of the restaurants that serve Maryland cuisine as well as other foods are: The Chesapeake, Peerce's Plantation, Shane's and Thompson's Sea Girt House. All of these restaurants are excellent, but are a little on the expensive side, so wait for your parents to visit and let them take you.

Campus Faces Dr. Andre P. Colombat

by Vanessa L. Facenda
Assistant Features Editor

In this, the 1987-88 academic year, Loyola has had many new additions to its faculty. One of the new staff members is Professor of French, Dr. Andre P. Colombat.

Monsieur Colombat, originally from Roanne, France, studied at the University of Lyons. He lived in Central America for two years teaching French at the National University of Honduras, and the French Lycee before coming to America in 1983. After receiving his Ph.D. at Washington University in St. Louis, Monsieur Colombat taught at St. Louis University and at the Alliance Francaise.

When asked why he chose to come to Loyola, Monsieur Colombat responded by saying that he was attracted to the atmosphere of Loyola's community. According to Monsieur Colombat, "the faculty and students are very nice, which makes it easy to work. At some schools, more time is spent trying to discipline the students; it is not that way here."

Attending school in France, and teaching at colleges and universities in America has enabled Monsieur Colombat to notice some great differences between French and American schooling. There are only universities in France, whereas in America students have the choice between private colleges or universities. The universities are free in France, but the selection process for admission is tougher than in America. In order to be accepted to a university a student has to take the baccalaurat (an admission test similar to College Boards) but once accepted, the only fee is for registration. Monsieur Colombat also commented that campus life is very different. Although there are some dormitories on campus, most French students do not live on campus. Most dorms are even quite a distance from the school campus. Monsieur Colombat likes the fact that students are much closer to their professors here. "The professors are there only to teach, nothing more," Monsieur Colombat also remarked that here, college helps the students like a family would, but in France, the students are more on their own. "There is no sentimental value in France about college as there is here in America. You go to school, you are taught, you leave, and you do not look back. People are more attached here. Both systems of schooling have both good and bad aspects about them."

Monsieur Colombat enjoys living here in America almost as much as he likes teaching here. French being his native language, Spanish being his second, and English his third language, Monsieur Colombat loves being able to learn colloquial English. He also admires the large variety among the people that make up America. He believes that, "the people are the main strength of the country; the richness of the population."

Monsieur Colombat is presently writing articles and has recently finished the manuscript for a book he is working on. The book is about the French philosopher and professor at the University of Paris VIII, Gilles Deleuze. The book shows the relation between his philosophy and literature, and how his philosophy can lead to a new form of literary criticism.

The key to Monsieur Colombat's way of teaching is transmitting interest to the student. He wants to give the student the love of what he is studying. Monsieur Colombat believes he is a sort of "middleman" between in-classroom learning and life after-the-classroom. "I want to enable the students to be completely independent outside the classroom in the language they are learning." Whether it is for work, travel, or meeting people, "I want to basically give to students, the right tools they need for later on." Monsieur Colombat wants the students to be able to work on their own and to also be able to apply what they have learned for use after.

Although he is only teaching Intermediate French this semester, Monsieur Colombat will be teaching Introductory French and French Composition and Conversation next semester. He is also qualified to teach Spanish and if he receives the opportunity, will do so.

Dick Vitale - too loud and obnoxious
Lefty Driesell - most do not understand what he's saying
Al McGuire - tries to exert too much control
Billy Packer - Be serious!
James Brown (CBS) - ex-b-ball player from Harvard. PERFECT...CHAPMAN AND BROWN IN '8888888888! Go to it!

Student Run Business Presented to SAC

by Shawn Biglin
Business Editor

At a recent meeting of the Dean's Student Advisory Council, Dean C. Robert Margenthaler and Assistant Dean John Jordan strongly expressed their interest in purchasing a business for students to operate, among other issues. The practice of school sponsored ventures is common among many reputable business schools and something both men support. The council also discussed the opportunity for the on-campus business to be the sale of computers to students and faculty, which is currently done by Academic Computing Services (ACS).

This type of business opportunity allows the students to "perfect", not merely practice, the skills learned in the classroom. Many different businesses were considered as viable investments, but some were not broad enough in scope to include a substantial number of majors. The sale of computers could involve most of the disciplines in the Seller School. For example, the MIS Club could provide customer support, the Marketing Club could use their expertise to develop advertising campaigns and sales promotion and the FMA would be responsible for the finances of the company.

This is the second year that ACS has sold microcomputers and peripherals to the students and faculty of Loyola. The level of success has been outstanding considering the business is run by one student. In the 1986-87 school year, over $84,000 worth of equipment was sold and in the fall of this year the sales already total $85,000, which is a sizeable rate of growth. The faculty of the Seller School and the Director of ACS, Brad Reece, believe that this business has great potential and with the proper dedication and direction its growth is unlimited. If this venture is made a student run business, a Board of Directors will be chosen, comprised of all students, and faculty advisors will become involved to provide direction for the students.

Although most of the members of the Dean's Student Advisory Council were in favor of the proposal, some raised questions about the feasibility of finding the desired level of commitment from the students and also if there would be a problem with continuity from semester to semester. Both Margenthaler and Jordan reiterated that the proposal was not final and no decision would be made until a formal business plan was constructed which would analyze the costs and revenues and answer some of the questions. Questioning aside, all present agreed that an on-campus student run business should be pursued further since it would provide students with valuable business experience.

Briefly addressed by the committee was the possibility of beginning a mentor program for business students. Some of the alumni and friends of the College have suggested the program. It would not be an internship program, so no credit would be granted, but it has some of the same features. Students wanting to participate must have Junior or Senior standing and they will be matched up with a volunteer in the business community who possesses the same interests (i.e. accounting, advertising, MIS...). This program has the potential to provide excellent experience in the business world and possible contacts for students to use after graduation.

AT&T's Struggle Post Divestiture Presented

by Shawn Biglin
Business Editor

The Executive On Campus Speaker Series commenced on March 18 with the Public Affairs Vice President of AT&T, Albert J. McGann. Mr. McGann's speech dealt with an historical perspective of the telephone industry before, during, and after the divestiture of AT&T.

In 1981 AT&T, which was founded by Alexander Graham Bell in 1875, possessed combined assets of $150 billion which at that time was greater than the combined assets of GM, IBM, GE, Eastman Kodak, and U.S. Steel. The company, which Alexander Bell tried unsuccessfully to sell patents of in 1878 to Western Union for a mere 100,000, later evolved into the largest company in the world. For 100 years the company followed the slogan "one policy, one system, universal service," and this management philosophy lasted until divestiture and may have led to the dissolution.

On January 1, 1984, the Bell System, which was a part of America, ceased to exist. Nothing could have prepared AT&T for the trauma involved with the divestiture. "The divestiture was an abrupt breaking up of a tightly integrated and finely tuned machine, not a gradual spinning off, which would have been better," exclaimed McGann. The government's motives for breaking up AT&T were pure, and the process was carried out by the Justice Department. The divestiture entailed breaking up AT&T into seven Regional Bell Operating Companies (RBOCs) leaving the holding company, AT&T to fend for itself. All that remained of the telephone giant was the holding company, Western Electric, and Bell Labs. Fortunately, the latter two represented immense strength, something desperately needed by the ailing AT&T. Bell Labs, where the transistor was invented, is responsible for laying the technological foundation for what we have today.

faced was that they were not only intricately woven managerially, they were also physically joined. Buildings, switches, equipment, and employees had to be carefully separated and segregated and not just on paper, but in physical reality. There were over one million employees before divestiture. So during the break-up, 700,000 employees needed to be either placed with a RBOC or released. The equipment and buildings were assigned to either AT&T or the RBOC based on whomever used it more than fifty percent of the time. All of the title transfers and other legalities that needed to be settled cost AT&T millions of dollars.

The break-up took careful planning and controlling by the RBOCs and AT&T since the many key decisions made could have affected the future viability of those entities. There still remain many scarred relationships between these organizations. McGann reminded the audience that something of this proportion [the divestiture] was not a voluntary action but something the court forced them to do.

There were many unavoidable problems associated with the divestiture. One of the most common problems was customer confusion, since the monthly bill went from one page to several with little explanation. Amazingly, service to AT&T customers was basically uninterrupted during the transition. Also AT&T needed to contend with their three million share owners. They approached the three largest brokers in New York City to handle the accounts, all refused claiming they did not have the capacity to handle even part of the accounts. So, AT&T was forced to form their own company to handle the transactions.

McGann concluded his speech by adding that "the biggest hurdle we've faced in the divestiture was entering the competitive market. The largest company in the world tried to make a unique metamorphosis overnight and received a rude awakening." One of the immediate problems they had to face was the lack of an image. AT&T had spent 100 years supporting the regional phone companies by providing one-stop shopping, local, long distance, and equipment. But after the break-up when AT&T was involved with just long distance and some equipment, a substantial poll found only a small percentage of the participants thought of AT&T as a long distance carrier. Quite unfairly, they had to win over their own customers with intensive marketing that cost millions of dollars.

Hunt Valley Center Awaits Final Review

by Mark Keenan
Assistant Editor Business Page

Loyola College is in the process of moving its Hunt Valley Campus to a new location on International Circle, Hunt Valley. Loyola currently has two off-campus centers, Hunt Valley and Columbia. The Hunt Valley Graduate Program was so successful that Loyola was forced to move to a bigger location.

According to Dr. Kim Sherman, the largest graduate program at Hunt Valley is the Master of Engineering Science Program. This program is followed closely by the MBA/MFS program. MFS refers to the Master of Science in Finance degree. Because the programs have grown so dramatically and because Loyola cannot expand here on campus, the college was forced to move to a larger classroom complex in Hunt Valley.

The College is now awaiting final review by its attorneys of the proposed lease for the International Circle location. Mel Blackburn, Loyola's Director of Administrative Services, considers this location to be ideal. The College's new off-campus center will be surrounded by major Hunt Valley offices and hotels, including the Marriott and Embassy Suites. Loyola's neighbors will be Peterson, Howell, and Heather.

Dr. Sherman credited the atmosphere of the proposed center. He stated that the old center had "no sense of Loyola." In designing the new center, Loyola attempted to "generate a sense of belonging and a sense of the college." The new location will include a fine lobby decorated with the Loyola Emblem, a receptionist, lounge space and vending spaces. The center will also feature places for the students to "relax, associate, and study." In addition, the center will contain a special office for students to meet faculty. Finally the center will have tremendous computer capability, including one computer lab/classroom and four convertible classrooms.

Loyola's Hunt Valley location attracts two-thirds of its students from industries in the Hunt Valley area and north. More than half of the students live north of the campus. Courses are taught by full-time Loyola professors with doctoral degrees. The MES program, however, does include several adjunct professors. The College expects the program to continue to grow and hopes to attract more students from York and southern Pennsylvania. The Loyola officials responsible for the Hunt Valley reorganization are Dr. Kim Sherman, Dr. Francis Cunningham, Dr. Bernard Weigman, Mel Blackburn, and Mary Ann Pearson, Loyola's Manager of off-campus Facilities.

The Merrill Lynch Investment Challenge has exemplified the turbulence that exists in the U.S. and world markets. Each mock portfolio began with $100,000 to be divided as the investment team saw fit—among stocks, bonds, and mutual funds in and outside of the U.S. The Merrill Lynch Investment Challenge is a competition of mock portfolio management. It is run on a software package called the Dow Jones Market Manager. The Market Manager tracks the stocks and trades, deducts for commissions, and credits dividends to an imaginary interest-bearing account. The person or group that has the largest portfolio at the end of the designated period will receive a prize, and other prizes will be awarded to the runners-up.

Gov't Pursues Loan Defaulters

(CPS) - The federal government has announced another "full-scale, coast-to-coast assault on deadbeats" who owe money to the government, including those who haven't repaid student loans.

Attorney General Edwin Meese, in announcing "Operation Deadbeat" Jan. 15, said the federal government would withhold delinquent borrowers' federal tax refunds, seize their property and hire private lawyers to help prosecute them.

The program is aimed at collecting about $80 billion in unpaid obligations to the government. About $5.3 billion is held by former students who haven't repaid student loans.

At his press conference, Meese reported a U.S. attorney in western Kentucky seized a BMW from a teacher who had defaulted on a student loan taken out in 1976.

The Reagan administration, of course, has for years attempted to recover unpaid student loans from defaulters. In November, Secretary of Education William J. Bennett threatened to expel colleges and trade schools from all federal student aid programs if they allow future loan default rates to exceed 20 percent. In October, President Reagan approved legislation that allows the Justice Department to hire private attorneys to litigate defaulted loans. In recent years, the Education Department has also worked with the Internal Revenue Service to withhold tax refunds from defaulters, reported defaulters to credit bureaus, hired private collection agencies and garnished wages.

Four days after the debut of "Operation Deadbeat," a "default summit" called by Rep. Pat Williams (D-Mont.) to forge a national plan to cut the number of Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) defaults ended, with Williams saying he had enough information to write a bill.

College aid directors and education associations were represented at the meeting, which discussed remedies ranging from better screening of students wanting loans to cutting schools with high default rates out of the GSL program.

FMA Visits Exchange

by Andrew T. Coyne

On Friday March 11th twenty members of the Financial Management Association (FMA) traveled to New York City for the annual field trip to various financial centers. The sites included the New York Stock Exchange, the Commodities Exchange, and the World Trade Center.

The FMA members started early, leaving at 5:30 AM and traveling to Newark, New Jersey. From Newark the group caught the PATH train into New York City and the financial district.

Once in the financial district, the members visited the New York Stock Exchange where a general information lecture and movie described the history of the Exchange. After the introduction, group members viewed the Exchange floor from the observation deck.

Also visited by the members was the Commodities Exchange. According to Joe Scandariato, President of the FMA, "the Commodities Exchange looked a lot more exciting than the Stock Exchange. There seemed to be a lot more yelling and activity."

After lunch the group utilized the free time in the itinerary to view New York City from the top of the World Trade Center. This activity pushed back the club's departure time right into rush hour.

Upon reflection, Joe Scandariato commented, "this is the first time that the FMA has attempted to do something like this [the trip]. There's room for improvement but overall it was a worthwhile trip, everybody had a good time and got something out of it." Scandariato added, "I hope next year's FMA group continues with the field trips, whether to New York, Philadelphia or Washington."

After a series of ties and run-offs, the FMA Officers have been elected for the 1988-89 school year. Pictured from left to right are John Grandisire - President, Jen Powers - Secretary, Kevan Clarke - Vice President, and Brian Pace - Treasurer. The current FMA Officers have done an impressive job and the new officers realize they will need to work hard to obtain that level of success. According to John Grandisire, "we are confident that we can keep up and build on what the current administration has done. Some of our goals are to increase student participation as well as faculty support and possibly plan additional trips to financial centers."

Area Company Offers Diverse Opportunities

Easco is a Fortune-listed manufacturing company, occupying positions of leadership in three industries: aluminum products, mechanics' hand tools, and industrial gratings. Easco's corporate office is located in Baltimore, Maryland. Its manufacturing and distribution facilities are located from coast to coast and in Canada and Puerto Rico.

Easco, which is registered with the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE), operates under three general managers; one for special market, principally Sears and Roebuck Co., another for the professional segment and a third for imported products. These three managers report to the Vice President of the company and President and General Manager of the hand tool group, Robert E. Anderson. Anderson is formerly of Black and Decker Manufacturing Company and the Stanley Works.

Easco is America's leading independent extruder of aluminum, producing custom components for a variety of end uses. The total market for soft aluminum is more than $2 billion. Its custom components include such industries as commercial and residential construction, data processing and office equipment, and telecommunications.

Easco maintains 13 extrusion and fabrication plants totalling approximately 1,452,000 square feet and four billets casting plants totalling 136,000 square feet. These sites are located in Arizona, North Carolina, Ohio and New Jersey.

The company is not only the leading extruder of aluminum, but also the leading manufacturers of mechanics' hand tools. Easco had the widest distribution network in the industry, serving both the amateur and professional mechanics through a variety of wholesale and retail channels. It is the primary supplier to Sears, Roebuck and Co. and the exclusive supplier to National Automotive Parts Association (NAPA), the nation's largest auto parts distributor. Acquisition of Oxwall Tool Co., in 1984, enabled Easco to actively participate in the lower-priced segment of the consumer market, where imported tools are a major factor.

The Group Administrative Offices for Easco's mechanics' hand tools is located in Hunt Valley, Maryland. Within this industry, the company operates seven manufacturing plants, including sites located in Canada, New York and Massachusetts.

Easco provides gratings for industrial use, primarily for flooring, walkways and stair treads in factories and power plants. The company also manufactures steel decking for bridges. In all these markets, Easco leads the nation. Ten industrial plants are scattered about Alabama, Oklahoma and Washington state.

During 1982, the company's shareholders approved a plan which provides for grants to key employees of incentive stock options (ISOs) and non-qualified stock options for up to an aggregate of 262,000 shares of common stock. Then in 1983, Easco's Board of Directors approved the assumption of the incentive stock option plan of Oxwall Tool Co., Inc., in connection with the company's acquisition of Oxwall. Under this plan 32,000 ISOs, as defined by the Internal Revenue Code, were granted. The company and its subsidiaries have pension plans covering substantially all employees.

Loyola Finally Springs for Quality Weight Room

by Paul Cygnarowicz
Sports Staff Writer

After three long months of renovation, the athletic department opened the doors to the weight room. "It was no secret that the old weight room was a shambles," said Loyola strength coach Vinnie Pfeifer. After seeing the limited, rusting equipment, athletic recruits were disappointed in Loyola. Likewise, Loyola students were not provided with a safe and useful place to train. Last spring, Provost Dr. Thomas Scheye looked into the situation and recommended a serious renovation. Due to his efforts and Pfeifer's the weight room is now one of the finest aspects of the arena. Named in Scheye's honor, the room features eleven Eagle machines for the legs and upper body. Also, more free weights and benches were added.

"It's almost a crime to have a college without a weight room," says Assistant trainer Dave Langrehr. He feels that despite the long wait, the athletic department has finally legitimized the weight room. People in the department are excited about the new equipment. The machines work on a principle of isokinetic resistance—a fixed speed with varied resistance. Langrehr comments, "As far as modern training equipment goes, this is the best out now."

To introduce the facility to the college body, Langrehr held a workshop during last Thursday's activity period. Throughout the workshop, Langrehr explained the principles of strength training, conditioning, and flexibility. Each athlete will carry different training goals into the weight room. For example, if you want to gain muscle mass or bulk, you should work with heavy weights and few repetitions. In contrast, athletes building muscle endurance [durability, flexibility, etc.] lift with low weights and higher repetitions. Points stressed in the discussion included the importance of stretching out, extending a joint's full range of motion, breaking up sequences [from upper to lower body], and avoiding overtraining. The old slogan "no pain, no gain" has been modified into

"train and don't strain."

Both Vinnie Pfeifer and Dave Langrehr emphasized the importance of intensity to a workout. "Time is the biggest wall you're up against. We all have very busy schedules to manage," says Pfeifer, "but getting here is half the battle. If you can eliminate the dead time, then it won't be hard to get a good workout. This should be a fun room, not a torture chamber or dungeon."

Before one can find success from training, they have to evaluate other aspects of their life. Notably, these include proper diet and sleep. Langrehr explains, "If you work out 3-4 days a week and go out drinking 7, you might find there's something wrong." Students who are new to working out will have to understand the premise that they won't see results for a while.

Until this year, the athletic department would open its doors and leave the students on their own. Now that has changed too. Vinnie Pfeifer and other monitors will be on hand to help students to work out safely and reach their goals.

The weight room will [tentatively] be open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m., each day. Pfeifer [ext. 2644] encourages students to make use of it. Also, the training room, which features a hip flexor machine and an upper body ergometer, is also available to students. The training room is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Intramural Playoff Battles Begin

by Rob Zink
Sports Staff Writer

With spring just around the corner, the Winter Intramural season comes near to an end. Within the next two weeks Volleyball, Basketball and Indoor Soccer will have played their championship games.

In the Volleyball league, eight teams will battle it out to clinch the title. Milwaukee's Best, captained by Steve Halligan boasts the best record of the league with 6-2.

The night league in Basketball will have their playoffs tonight in Reitz arena. At the present time, the White Shadows, captained by Joe English have captured the top spot sporting an 8-1 record. The team remains very optimistic for the playoffs and expects to make the championship game, which will be held on Wednesday night.

Out of the five teams which make up the basketball's day league, Magic Johnson, captained by David Stackurski remains in first place. The league's championship game takes place Tuesday afternoon (March 22) during activity period.

This season's indoor soccer league proved to be extremely aggressive. Teams that would make the playoffs were not easy to predict. In most cases, it wasn't until the very last regular season games that the four teams making the playoffs could be determined. Teams pulling ahead and making the playoffs include Brass Balls, captained by Matt Salvestrini; Weidemann, captained by Patrick Nisco; Ripsters, captained by Rob Leimback; and Ripsters Revisited, captained by Chris Kelly. Chris Kelly of Ripsters Revisited believes that the team will surpass Brass Balls in the playoffs and then meet the Ripsters in the championship game. Matt Salvestrini of Brass Balls believes that it will be an extremely tough playoff game. "The team has suffered a loss of two top players—but we were able to come out on top in the last two seasonal games," said Salvestrini.

Baseball Off to Difficult Start

by Dan Getz
Sports Staff Writer

The Loyola baseball team dropped to 0-3 early last week after losing to Western Maryland 9-4 and then dropping both ends of a double-header to Mount St. Mary's on Sunday, March 13, 10-6 and 10-2.

"We really should have beaten Western Maryland," said Coach Jeff King.

A total of eight errors in the Western Maryland game caused the defeat, said junior second baseman Steve Bellone. Loyola pitchers Chuck Acquistio, Tim McComas, and Mike O'Connor allowed only three earned runs against Western Maryland. The pitchers also combined to allow only four walks, which is down considerably from last year.

Loyola allowed six runs in the second inning but only four hits. Three crucial errors were the problem, said King.

The Greyhounds had only five hits in the game, two of which came from freshman shortstop Joe Hammann.

The first game of the double-header with Mount St. Mary's was a different story, according to Bellone.

The biggest difference was in the errors; only two by the young Loyola team.

Losing 6-1 going into the fifth inning, the "Hounds" woke up.

"We didn't want it to happen again," said Bellone, speaking of the common blowouts the team suffered last year.

In the top of the seventh, with no outs and the bases loaded, Chuck Acquistio doubled in two runs to tie the score at six.

The bottom of the seventh proved to be the difference in the game. Mark Kovinsky, who pitched a strong 6 2/3 innings striking out six batters, walked three.

The Mountaineers went on to score four runs before relief pitcher Mike O'Connor could get the final out.

Loyola left a total of eight men on base, six of those in the final three innings.

In the second game of the double-header the Mount again beat Loyola, 10-2. The Greyhounds were in the game early with a 1-0 lead but couldn't hold it.

Mount St. Mary's, a Division II school, and Western Maryland from Division III, are both members of the Mid-Atlantic Conference. The Mount will be moving up to Division I in the fall.

If you haven't heard, America's pastime has hit Loyola complete with bunts and homers and seventh-inning stretches. If you haven't seen such sights in the two years that Loyola's baseball club has been in full swing, that's because Loyola's 23 member dedicated club is forever without the home field advantage.

The lack of a home field results in a grave lack of fan support for the club. The club's nearest game will be played at Johns Hopkins on April 10 at 12 p.m. Senior pitcher, Tim McComas said that the club is going to try to get a lot of fans to come to that game. Because all the games are played away, the club understands why their stands are empty.

Problems in ordering hats and other equipment also plague the club. Club members, Acquisto, club treasurer, Stephen Bellone, Ed Kowalewski, and Nick Milano are in charge of supplying the club. Bellone said that he has run into difficulties when companies see that they are dealing with individuals rather than with an institution. The club has ended up having to deal with a lot of mistakes in their orders that they feel could have been avoided if the companies thought they were dealing with representatives of Loyola College rather than with individuals. Bellone feels that such managerial business could be more successfully dealt with by a club moderator with the backing of Loyola College. Bellone said that when dealing with companies, "You can make better use of contacts when you're working through a school rather than through individuals."

The baseball club is not only expensive, but it is also very time-consuming. Acquisto first got the idea to start a club when he was a freshman at Loyola. He sent surveys around Butler Hall and discovered that there was a lot of student interest. By the end of his freshman year, he had a club charter, and by his sophomore year, Chuck had the club under the Athletic Department and six games on the schedule. This season, the club has 16 games on their roster, and, under the direction of their coach, Jeff King, they are earning the respect of the division three teams they are playing.

Acquisto said, "If someone had told me that by the time I was a junior I'd have a roster with 23 names and a schedule that had us playing teams ranging from division three to division one, I wouldn't have believed them." But that's exactly what happened. Acquisto said that the team's goal now is not only to be competitive, but to win. He thinks that if the team can add just two or three more quality players to its roster, they can do just that.

The club is very close to being a complete success, and with a little help from Loyola and its students, they should soon meet their goals. The club is looking to go varsity in maybe four or five years, and if they can continue what Chuck has started, they may just make it to division one level, but still the problem lies in the funding. Acquisto summed it up, "It's not how good you are, or how far you've come, but it's whether or not the school has the money."

Lady 'Hounds Lose

by Rob Zink
Sports Staff Writer

Last Tuesday, as the weather took a dramatic twist, the Lady Greyhounds entered the home turf to battle their rival, University of Pennsylvania and endured a 3-2 defeat.

Although the team performed very well at last weekend's William and Mary Tournament, they were not able to pull ahead in their home opener. "Although the tournament helped a great deal, there is a different sort of pressure which exists during a tournament scrimmage and a conference game. Our biggest problem is that the team has not worked together for a significant amount of time," said head coach Sandy Campanaro.

The cold was definitely an added factor to the problems which the Lady Greyhounds encountered during their first game of the season.

"Defensively, the team played very well," said Campanaro. Goalie Sue Heather kept the team in the game making several saves. Offensively however, the team was not all there. "Our connections weren't there. We had the open players but we weren't seeing them soon enough. Towards the end of the game we became frustrated and lost our composure and began to force passes that weren't there," said Karen Ravn. Jeanne Kormanick attempted to bring the offense to life by scoring the only two goals for Loyola. This challenged the University of Pennsylvania but proved to be the only positive effect of the game. "We did very well at the William and Mary Tournament and were extremely pleased. The tournament should have provided confidence. Weather was bad and the attacks did not penetrate against Penn's strong defense. Goalie Sue Heather played a great game. Defense is our strongest asset. We are a young team. We were scoreless until the second half. The team has so much potential," said Kormanick.

Just like Loyola, Penn's players are good athletes that like to run and play aggressively. The game was low scoring, but Loyola should have pulled through. The Lady Greyhounds are an extremely versatile team. One player can play a variety of positions. The key is just to make the connections. The team claims to have learned a lot from this game. They plan to incorporate what they learned into future games. "The potential was there. We should have won, but we have to put it behind us and learn from our mistakes. The key is to take one game at a time and to keep positive attitudes," said Beth Begos.

As far as the remainder of the season looks, Campanaro has an optimistic outlook. She remarks, "The team has to take one game at a time and build on each game. I am optimistic that this team is talented enough to continue the winning tradition of Loyola."

Late Friday afternoon, the Lady Greyhounds faced Bucknell University, where they fared a hundred percent better. Although the weather still was not desirable, Loyola managed to sport a 12-4 win. The season is only two games old—therefore the team must concentrate on the strong opposition which lies ahead.

High scorers of the game were Mary Hart and Karen Ravn, with four goals each. The Lady Greyhounds had achieved eight goals before Bucknell was able to strike one in the net. Senior Mary Hart believes that there is not one particular star on the team. Everybody contributes greatly, making it a team effort. "We played a lot better than in the University of Pennsylvania game passing-wise. However, we're still not to our potential. Defense was outstanding. There is a strong team effort."

Track and Field Set to Go at Loyola

by Tom Cabral
Sports Staff Writer

Sunday, March 27 will usher in a new era in Loyola athletics. Track and field, under the guidance of Fr. Peter Clark, will compete in the Towson State Invitational. Coach Clark outlined his goals for the upcoming season. "We want to establish a program in order to compete on an intercollegiate level. Eventually I would like to attain full varsity status for the team." Right now the team enjoys club status.

One problem the fledgling team has is the absence of track and field facilities on the Loyola campus. This lack of facilities is compensated by the generosity of Johns Hopkins University. "There are pretty good conditions at Johns Hopkins," said Coach Clark. Every day for practice, the team must run down to Johns Hopkins, where the field is reserved between 4 p.m. and 5 p.m.

"Overall we'll be very competitive from the sprinters to the middle distance and long distance runners. Field people have a good chance to win a few events," says Coach Clark. Versatility will be a key element to the success of the track and field team. "There are many events and we don't have the people for each event," says Coach Clark. Most team members will have to participate in a few events.

Every Monday and Thursday morning, the track team can be found in the swimming pool. While there is little swimming going on there is a lot of running going on in the low end of the pool. Weight training is also part of the practice regimen. "The team is very motivated. The amount of practice will pay off across the board. There is a lot of dedication for a club sport."

Anyone interested in the track team can call Coach Peter Clark at 532-8745.

Athlete of the Week Karen Ravn

by Kerry Marshall
Sports Staff Writer

The Loyola Women's Lacrosse team recently acquired a welcome addition to their offensive attack. Sophomore, Karen Ravn, who transferred to Loyola from the University of Massachusetts, has one of the most powerful shots on the East Coast. Ravn, a finance major from Huntington, Long Island, was an Honorable Mention All-American for lacrosse, while also being a varsity letter winner in tennis and basketball.

Karen was recruited by UMass, but after spending a year there, she decided that a large school just was not for her. Ravn explained, "I really missed the community atmosphere—it was just so hard to get to know people." Despite the difficulties she had adjusting socially, Ravn had an excellent season. She was one of the few starting freshmen, she played every game and scored thirteen goals. Thus, it was a hard decision to transfer, but Karen says she knew by January that UMass was not the school for her. The two schools in contention were the University of Virginia and Loyola. Having chosen Loyola, Ravn said now that she knows it was the right decision. "I love it here. It is so much easier to get to know people and get involved in things," Ravn noted.

Going into last Tuesday's game, the team was "psyched" according to Ravn, but once the game started, they found that the passing and shot opportunities that had been available to them during the weekend tournament were nonexistent during this game. Said Ravn, "I think we became really nervous when we realized this and it caused us to lose our concentration and do stupid things." She feels that this game was a definite indication of the team's strong and weak points. The stronger aspect in Ravn's view is the defense. She commented "They really know how to work together to get the job done." The team needs to work more on their offense and on making sure that they have confidence in each other.

Almost the exact opposite is true of Karen's individual game, which is built around her extremely powerful shot. The area in which she feels she needs to concentrate on the most is the protection of her stick. She feels that she can sometimes be an easy target for hard checking. The aspect of lacrosse which Ravn enjoys most is shooting. The much talked about shot is due, according to Ravn, to her plastic stick and her powerful arms.

This natural talent will obviously be a great asset to the women's team this year, but Karen has experienced some difficulty this year with her status as a transfer student, both athletically and socially. "In the beginning it was hard to make friends because everybody has their established group of friends. That is where being a part of a team really helped," she said. The adjustment on the lacrosse field has not always been easy, either. "I sometimes feel a little uninvolved in the offense, but I know I'll feel more comfortable as time goes on."

When asked about the team's chances, Ravn seems confident that the team will live up to the high standards set by the Loyola community. She feels that the team's togetherness will help them through any situation. "These people are the nicest group I've ever worked with. This is an actual team—there are no individual stars and everyone knows how to work together." The team's chances, according to Ravn, are also enhanced by Head Coach Sandy Campanaro, who not only has a great deal of experience in playing the game, but also has learned how to be patient with the team. When asked for a final prediction of the outcome of the Lady Greyhounds Lacrosse season Karen Ravn replied with a confident smile. "Well, our ranking is very good and I really think we have a good chance of making the playoffs this year, that is if our offense keeps improving our attack." One can safely assume that the power of Karen Ravn's shot will help a great deal in improving that attack.
